Background

A Rhode Island native and state general treasurer seeking to bring financial management experience to Congress to support renewable energy initiatives and health care protections

Son of former Bill Clinton advisor Ira Magaziner, Seth was born and raised in Rhode Island and graduated from Brown University with a degree in History

Became an elementary school teacher before returning to college to get a graduate degree in business from Yale University; worked his way from portfolio associate to vice president of Trillium Asset Management

First elected to public office in 2014 as Rhode Island's state treasurer; during his tenure, he created the Rhode Island Infrastructure Bank, which has increased the availability of low-cost financing for infrastructure-based projects, such as renewable energy projects, water treatment systems, and public transportation

Led Rhode Island's School Building Task Force, bringing communities together to plan rebuilds and repairs of school buildings; bonds approved by the state have repaired or replaced over 180 school buildings during Magaziner's tenure as general treasurer

In January 2022, Magaziner announced his campaign to represent Rhode Island's 2nd District, during which he focused on combating climate change, protecting healthcare access, and defending reproductive rights
